

WILDERNESS FIRST AID

(WFA)

2 DAYS, 16 HOURS

Courses taught through
Wilderness Medical Associates
(WMA)

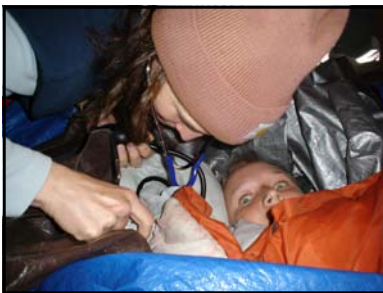

Wilderness Medical Associates was founded in 1978 by Peter Goth, M.D. to provide medical training and risk management for Outward Bound schools in the United States. Conventional First Aid and EMT training curricula are designed for an urban environment, and assume the availability of 911 communications and rapid ambulance transport to a hospital setting. Outward Bound was operating wilderness expeditions and found that conventional medical training programs did not address the specialized wilderness context of delayed rescue transport in remote areas, prolonged exposure to severe environments, and the limited availability of medical equipment. Wilderness Medical Associates tailored courses to these needs and discovered that the demand for this training extended to organizations as diverse as the National Park Service, university outing clubs, rural ambulance services, the FBI, and oil exploration companies.
